Science behind recommendations

Redeminds adopts a data-driven scientific approach that is combined with extensive psychological research of careers and attributes.

01 Personality

The personality traits are based on the OCEAN Model which was first given by Lewis Goldberg, and later developed by Costa and McCrae. The OCEAN model of personality views human personality as five primary traits, which are Openness to experience, Conscientiousness, Extroversion, Agreeableness, and Neuroticism.

02 Intelligence

Howard Gardner proposed a theory that suggested eight types of Intelligence which suggested that there are multiple ways in which human can be smart rather than having only one aspect of being intelligent. The difference in Intelligence is based on the development of an individual and their surroundings.

03 Vocational Interests

The vocational interests are adopted from John L. Holland's theory of career choice which explained how certain personalities are better for particular career choices. For example, an extrovert will have more fun being a teacher than an introvert. He found that there are essentially six types of vocational personalities.

04 Learning Styles

Learning Styles were developed as an index to assess the learning preference in four dimensions by Richard M. Felder and Linda K. The ILS is a self-assessment tool that helps individuals understand their preferred learning style and provides guidance on how to adapt their learning strategies to better match their style.

05 Career Orientation

The concept of Career Orientations or career anchors as called by Edgar Schein which refers to an individual's self-perceived talents, abilities, and values that guide their career choices and development. According to Schein, individuals develop career anchors through a combination of their early life experiences, feedback from others, and their own self-reflection.
